Introduction

Welcome to our new home! I hope that someday every landmark, café, and street corner in Manhattan summons happy reminiscences of our adventures together. In order to aid in building this library of experiences, I have created this book of maps. I hope that by marking the places we discover, you can turn this book into an album of fond memories.

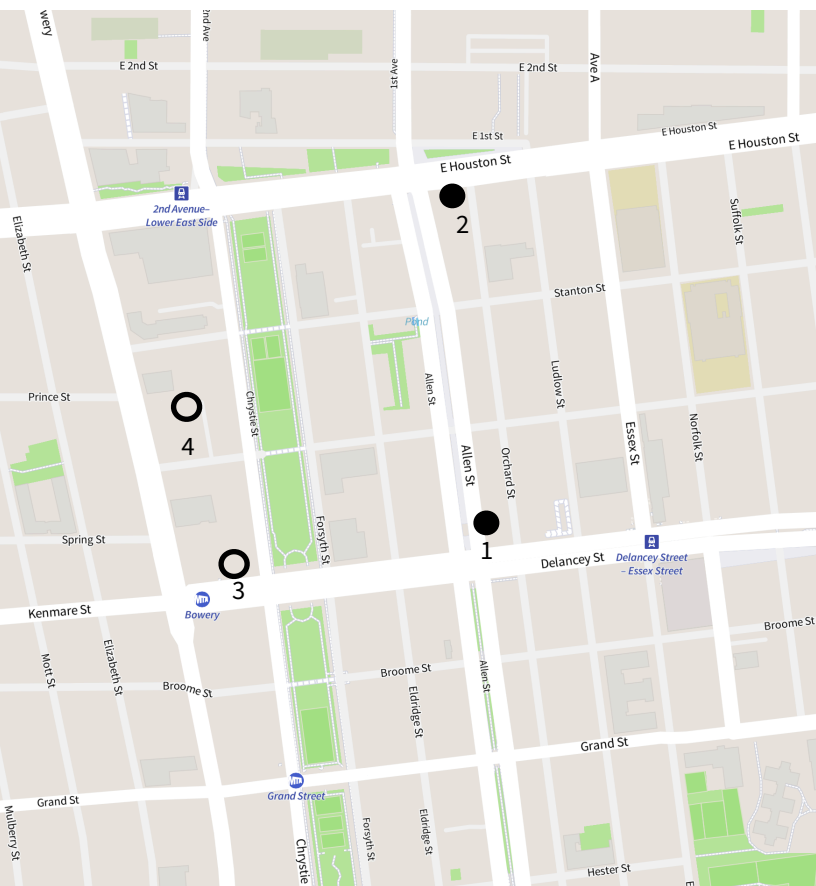

How to Use this Book

When you find a place you want to remember, either because you have visited it already or because you would like to someday, add it to this book.

1. Look up the place's location online or on another map. Learn the location by answering the following questions:
 - What street is the place on?
 - What is the nearest cross street?
 - Is the place on the corner or in the middle of the block?
 - Is the place on the north, south, east, or west side of the street or corner?
2. Then, find the map in this book that includes that location.
3. Next to the map, write the place's name on the next available numbered line. You might also want to write a note about the place's location. It could be the place's entire address or just the name of its street.

4. Mark the place's location on the map. It doesn't have to be exact, as long as you have it on the right block and on the correct side of the street or corner.
 - If you have already visited the place, draw a solid dot: ●.
 - If you have not yet visited, draw an open circle: ○. Then, when you visit, fill in the circle.
 - Write the place's number from the facing page next to the dot.
